Lights to Save Lions

Richard Turere is 13 years old. In 2012, he made a speech at the TED conference in California. TED (Technology, Entertainment and Design) is a conference for inventors and scientists from all over the world. What did Richard talk about?

Richard was born in Kenya, near Nairobi National Park. When he was nine years old, he started looking after his father's cattle. At night, the cows went into a small shed.

The problem was that lions came out at night. They often killed the cows and ate them. So the farmers killed the lions. That was also a problem because lions are one of the biggest tourist attractions in Kenya, especially in Nairobi National Park. In the past, there were over half a million lions, but now there are only about 2,000 lions still alive in Kenya.

Richard tried to think of a way to protect the cows. When he went out at night, he used a torch. He noticed that lions are afraid of moving lights. Using some broken parts of motorbike lights and a solar panel, he made lights that flashed on and off around the cattle shed.

His idea was successful and he installed lights for his neighbours too. His idea saved the cattle and saved the lions too.
